The arts community is essential to the thriving of the Las Vegas Valley community. Children especially need a space to express themselves in a variety of ways, and they need to be provided with the proper tools and channels to use their artistic gifts widely. The LVV community thrives on the arts, from local theatres, performances on the strip, and artistic displays downtown, this community is all about the arts. With the transient nature of the LVV community, creating a school focused on the arts would provide an opportunity for locals to stay and contribute to their local economy, essentially paying it forward to the generations to come. This Academy will allow students K-8 to explore their passions in a safe and structured environment, while fostering the ideals of community and expression of self as they learn what it means to be an artist.

Myself being born and raised in North Las Vegas, I strongly believe an institution like Do & Be Arts Academy is much needed. It will bring a different type of schooling option for families in the area that has not been available to them before.

Being a K-8 Do & Be will give families and their students a chance to achieve higher levels of academic achievement, a chance to attend a school with more diverse student and teacher populations as well as be in smaller classroom and grade sizes. One thing that many families will be drawn to is that fact that their students can attend the school for about 8 years. This gives the students a chance to form bonds and relationships that they may not have had at other school or even at home. It can be a place where they can be comfortable being themselves and excited to come into every day.

Although different types of schooling have been offered in North Las Vegas such as other charters and private schools, what makes Do & Be different is having the arts interrogated into their mission. Being an arts school, Do & Be will give students the opportunity to explore not only their community but also the world around them. It will give them the chance to bring their full selves to school and further develop their imagination as well as their academics.
